Take the recent covers of the liberal Newsweek and Time: instead of covering the story of the midterm elections that might cause them to rethink their editorial choices, they instead find a way to somehow connect President Trump to abortion. Newsweek's recent cover has "MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS." As you can see, that's pretty clear. What's less clear, however, is what the cover was supposed to mean. The headline and subheadline were "Back to Defunding America," but the body of the text seems to be addressing the topic of abortion, not the issue of defunding. The only way to interpret the magazine's attempt at humor, one that comes off looking pretty desperate, is as a tip-off that this is not a real cover. Note how there's no actual image of President Trump, or anything that could be described as "political." Back to Defunding America? The problem with abortion isn't a lack of funding. Even if you add up all the money spent by the government for everything, including wars, the federal highway trust fund, Pell grants, education, and a few other things, you can't even begin to come close to the number of abortions performed every year in the United States. But no matter what Newsweek says, it's hard to argue that defunding abortion providers is a solution to that problem. So what's their goal? Is it to actually address the issue of abortion? Or is it to have some fun with a subject that they don't actually like? Today, Adbusters! Magazine, the

After the big anti-Trans rally at the Minnesota State Capitol in March, police in at least three cities have received reports of suspicious persons posing as "women" in attempts to solicit sex. In suburban Minneapolis, a man pretended to be a woman and made sexual comments while asking to go into a residence in April. In St. Paul, an attempted indecent exposure occurred April 13 after a man said he had sexual feelings for a girl at the state Capitol. And on April 10 in Minnesota City, an attempted indecent exposure occurred when a male suspect said he was attracted to a 15-year-old girl, the St. Cloud Times reports. According to police in both Minneapolis and St. Paul, the suspects appear to have been straight and cisgender males 2d92ce491b
