The following years, Covas worked in the creation of scripts for the series El infierno del revólver (The revolver hell), Espinas, Güeros, Yakuza and La mujer del imperio (The women of the empire). During the period 1972-1974, Covas created the film production company Filmarte, which would become a stepping stone for some of the most interesting films in the 1970s: La ley de la sangre (Blood law), El gato con botas (cat with boots), La ciudad de la luna (City of the moon), El prisionero (The prisoner) and Sueño de siete (Dream of seven). In the late 1970s, Covas created two of his best-known comics series: Marcos, a science-fiction series about an astronaut who discovers a colony of highly evolved beings on another planet, and Marcos, which recounts the tales of a young boy who, due to a series of strange and sometimes fatal accidents, has become an adult and must face the mysteries of his life and his current destiny. In 1989, Marcos won the Eisner Award for Best Writer/Artist. The series appeared in 35 issues until March 1993. In the early 1980s, Covas began to create the mythological series El demonio del barrio (The demon of the neighborhood), about a gentleman who discovers the existence of supernatural beings in every man and every city. This would be the first of three large-size comics to be published in the Marcos series, and the first of the five comics
