INTRODUCTION {#sec1-1}

===== Infantile hypertrophic pyloric stenosis (IHPS) is the most common cause of persistent vomiting in infancy. The disorder is characterized by hypertrophy of the smooth muscle fibers of the pyloric antrum, which results in narrowing of the pyloric lumen.\[[@ref1]\] Cystic fibrosis (CF) is a genetic disorder with autosomal recessive inheritance. A number of complications and presentations of this disease include pancreatic and bronchial obstruction leading to malnutrition, poor weight gain and growth failure. The prevalence of CF is 0.2/1000 live births in Saudi Arabia.\[[@ref2]\] Abdominal pain is an important feature in CF. Here, we present a case of cystic fibrosis with hypertrophic pyloric stenosis.

CASE REPORT

{#sec1-2} ====== A 6-year-old boy presented to the Pediatric outpatient department with a history of progressive abdominal distension and vomiting for 4 months duration.

He had no history of fever or abdominal distension. Parents reported that he had been suffering from projectile vomiting. On physical examination, the child was moderately built and had fine breath sounds in all four quadrants. He was afebrile and well hydrated. Abdominal examination revealed a distended painful abdomen with prominent umbilicus and dull percussion. Abdominal ultrasound showed a large 12×6 cm cystic lesion of the abdominal cavity located between the liver and the kidneys, with a smooth wall \[Figure [Cystic lesion of abdominal cavity{#F1} Laboratory data were as follows: hemoglobin, 10.2 gm/dl; mean cell volume, 89.1 fl; reticulocyte count, 44,000/ μ l; white blood cell count, 13,200 cells/ μ l. Renal and liver functions were normal.
