Born in Cheltenham, England, Holmes studied music under William Crotch at the Royal College of Music before going to Germany in 1894 where he continued his study with Robert Fuchs and Max Reichleher. Holmes started work with the Associated Chamber Opera Company in London in 1895 and then moved to the Royal Opera House in 1898. He worked there for 11 years as conductor and accompanist until 1901. From 1901 to 1906 he was a critic for The Musical World. Holmes wrote two operas, Samson et Dalila (1898) and The Last of the Plainsmen (1902), both based on old French plays, and about 1000 songs and 10 symphonies. Most of his songs were published by Boosey & Hawkes. His three symphonies were published by Schott in 1910, at first under
