Japanese was one of the first languages to have a complex character-based writing system. It is well known for its narrow, angular characters that make their meaning readily apparent. Japanese, Chinese, and Korean are called as "CJK Languages" and the number of CJK characters is now approaching 100,000. The windowing system of Windows 8 introduces a new type of program called Live Tiles. In Windows 8, there are Live Tiles available for most of the programs. One of the most valuable Live Tiles is "Instant" which is used for displaying the information for few seconds before the program starts. For example, Instant application will display the current weather or stock prices for few seconds before the program starts. Similarly, you can use this feature of Windows 8 to display Kanji character or to display the meaning of the Kanji. Daily Kanji for Windows 8 is a such kind of application. It will display a new character daily. You can use the application in two ways: First, you can open Daily Kanji on the Start screen. If you do this, you can easily learn a new Kanji character. For example, it may take you few seconds to open the application. Then, you may see a window like below: Second, you can open Daily Kanji by clicking on its tile on the Start screen. If you do this, you can learn the Kanji with the help of context menu as shown below: If you want to learn the Kanji and its meaning at the same time, Daily Kanji is the app for you. Here is a video for Daily Kanji in Windows 8: Daily Kanji for Windows 8 Requirements: You may have Windows 8 or Windows 8.1 installed. You must have a working Internet connection. The above guide is for the basic users. If you have any troubles, please contact me using the comments. I will reply you as soon as I can. Screenshots:
