References External links Official website Category:Icons Category:Pascal Dufour (designer)The storm system that wreaked havoc on the D.C. region yesterday has a team of meteorologists looking ahead to what could be more trouble for the Mid-Atlantic in the next few days. Why? The wind will build up energy while the storm is sitting off the coast of Florida and could bring a big storm to the Mid-Atlantic, meteorologists say. The storm is causing havoc in the Mid-Atlantic already. Meteorologist Ben Heffernan is with the National Weather Service in Taunton, Mass. He says "we have seen much higher winds and rain totals just off the coast of Cape Hatteras, which is very close to here." He says the storm has been spinning very slow, which has allowed the winds to build up energy. In fact, he says there is only a small area of the storm that is getting weaker and will soon be losing power. He says the storm is now expected to remain off the coast. "We know it will stay offshore, but we don't know where," Heffernan says. As it sits now, the storm will be the first of the Atlantic season. There's a chance it could be a hurricane but it hasn't been classified as one. He says it will have
