- Are you looking for information on a particular domain? Do you want to find all subdomains? It's always useful to have all these details regarding a given target up-and-running right at hand, especially as it may not be possible to scan a given site directly from a computer. The available portable tools here on Softpedia are no exception to this rule, with tools for the search of domain names by name, extension, and URL. This is what FindName is about. This app can be downloaded right away, because it doesn't require any installation to operate. It's available as a stand-alone application, with no additional framework required. It can be run on a portable device, without affecting performance on the target system, and it can also work with a PC.

Region I'm most interested to learn the analysis of this. One line of thinking would be that as women reach their first child, they're not as worried about their own health and wealth as they are their children's. Maybe they've not had to worry about that so much before, but it's reasonable to believe that now they have, their priorities have shifted a little. It seems to me to be pretty reasonable to make that assumption, but I'd be curious to know what the analysis of this is. This is interesting because we know this to be the case in developed countries. It's not to say there aren't other relevant factors, it's just that it's clearly a major one that I haven't really seen discussed. I do find it interesting that in wealthy countries, men are less likely to have a child than women.

In poorer countries, the
