Normally you get this information from package managers, but sometimes the version information is in a weird place that a package manager cannot access (e.g., some python modules that have to be installed from source). Is there some way to go directly to GitHub and get this info? ===== joshzayin

Looks like this package has no version information: [Maybe there's a way to get it from the git repo? ----- nav [lists what's on github, you can click on the highlighted package and it
