The influence of the vaginal environment on the onset of follicular development, and the effects of hormonal control on this function. The influence of the vaginal environment on the onset of follicular development was investigated in ovariectomized female rats. Rats housed in controlled or social conditions were ovariectomized and injections of the appropriate hormones were given during a 28 day period beginning 3 weeks following surgery. Ovarian histology was performed on all animals to confirm ovariectomy and injections of hormones were given daily. Social housing conditions induced an earlier onset of follicular development than did ovariectomy or hormone treatment alone. Injection of FSH was ineffective in inducing ovulation in ovariectomized animals but induced ovulation when the animals were housed in a social environment. Based on the present data, it appears that the hormonal control of follicular development is most effective in the presence of the vagina. Honeywell is buying Map Intelligence, a company that creates geo-spatial data visualisation products, for £328m ($490m), further solidifying its position in the market for smart buildings. The firm, whose products include software that locates sinks and taps, digital maps that reveal parking availability and service alerts, and software to calculate the carbon footprint of a building, said it will create a $1bn (£691m) business. The firm was floated on the London Stock Exchange in December and it raised £300m of private debt at a price of £11.50 a share in the listing. This meant Honeywell's shares price appreciated about 90% since then and it ended the day at a high of £14.75. "This is a significant acquisition for us in terms of it giving us a foothold in the connected-building space," said Nick Peeling, the group chief executive of Honeywell's aerospace division. "It is very complementary to the business that
