Viral oncoproteins can transform cells by inducing loss of growth control through interaction with cellular signaling components. In many instances, these interactions involve receptor tyrosine kinases (RTKs). For example, activation of the growth factor receptors leads to sustained stimulation of tyrosine kinase activity and transformation. However, cellular transformation, depending on the particular RTK, can be opposed by interactions with protein tyrosine phosphatases (PTPs), which serve as negative regulators of the RTK signaling pathway. In this report, we have focused on the protein-tyrosine phosphatase, PTP1B. We demonstrate that PTP1B can inactivate RTKs, and suggest a mechanism for this inactivation. In particular, PTP1B dephosphorylates the RTK, resulting in its dimerization and subsequent recruitment and activation of SH2-domain containing proteins. More importantly, we provide evidence that PTP1B inactivation of RTKs plays a prominent role in the antiproliferative activity of transforming oncoproteins such as SV40 large T antigen, v-Src, and epidermal growth factor receptor.Q: How to get permutation and combination of product terms Assume I have a vector $v \in \mathbb{R}^n$ where v_i could be any of the following: $$\{1,2\}, \{1,2,3\},\{2,3\}, \{2,3,4\}, \{3,4\}, \{3,4,5\}$$ How would I go about generating the permutations and combinations of the product terms? So in the example above, this would be: \begin{align} &\{2,3\} \\ \text{and}\\ &\{1,2,3\} \end{align} An alternative format is if $$v=\left[\begin{matrix}1,2\\1,3\end{matrix}\right]$$ Then the order of the product terms matters.
